

Dr hab. med. Marta Czeńnikiewicz-Guzik BDS, PhD, FDS RCPS(Glasg) – the head of the Department of Dental Prophylaxis and Experimental Dentistry of the Institute of Dentistry at Jagiellonian University, a specialist in oral surgery. She has been associated with the Jagiellonian University from the very beginning of her career, where she studied and in 2003 received PhD based on studies of the role of Helicobacter pylori in the oral cavity and its relationship with the infection of the stomach. She continued her scientific work during her postdoctoral fellowship at Emory University (USA), when she started her research on the immunology of periodontium and began studying the importance of oral cavity chronic inflammation for general health. During her work in the USA, she had an opportunity to cooperate with renown immunologists: Prof. Jorg Goronzy and Prof. Cornelia Weyand, currently heading Immunology program at Stanford University. After returning to Poland and defending habilitation thesis, she pursues her scientific work doing research both in animal models and clinical studies. At the same time she continues her mission to propagate the “evidence based medicine” idea in dentistry – she is section editor for the experimental medicine of Polish Dental Society journal “Journal of Stomatology”. She chairs Scientific Committee of Polish Dental Society and is the editor of Evidence Based Medicine dental journal “Stomatologia”, where clinical practice is discussed on the basis of clinical trials. Her main clinical interest is oral surgery, more recently she focuses on the microsurgery of periodontium procedures, while cooperating with Periodontal Department of Glasgow University Dental School, UK. Marta Czeńnikiewicz-Guzik collaborates with other foreign academic centres such as Monash University (Australia), Stanford University (USA), Vanderbilt University (USA), Oxford University (UK), Dresden University (Germany) and societies for example European Society of Hypertension which rewarded her recently with the prestigious Alberto Ferrari Price for her research on the association between chronic periodontitis and hypertension. Dr hab. med. Marta Czeńnikiewicz-Guzik is a member of Polish Dental Society, International Association for Dental Research, British Society of Periodontology and Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons.
